Second Conditional: Positive and Negative If I/She/She do not earn â £ 1,000,000 (condition) me, he/she/© that they earned â £ 1,000,000 (condition) what would I do, he/she/© they? An event or current situation that is impossible: 'If I were a dog, I slept all day'. (It is impossible to change to a dog!) If he lived on the moon, he would build a big house. (It is impossible!) According to conditional, be careful again! We can also use the second conditional to give advice, using this structure: if I were you, you Remember if! In plural forms ('no', 'you' and 'they'), we should always use 'were'! We can also put the 'would be the' infinitive '(result) first: Example: i + + play + football (result) + if + a + man (conditional is used to talk about events that are more improvable to the first conditional. We use the second parole to talk about future events that are impossible. Is that the Light? After 'would' we always demand the infinitive form of the main verb. The first conditional is a structure used to talk about possibilities in the present or future. Then you can say: "If you did your homework for 3:00 in the morning, I'd give you an ice cream." or "If you finished your homework at 3:00 in the morning, I'd give you ice cream." Also remember that the tense past in a second condition is not a "real step", as it refers to actions in the present or future. Example: "If I'm working tomorrow, I'll tell you." As for the second condition, you could also use the "If I were..." structure that can be used in place of the past time in se-clause.
